Barossa Valley

International Series

AUSTRALIA'S BAROSSA VALLEY HAS BEEN HOME TO FAMILY WINEMAKERS FOR OVER FIVE GENERATIONS.

Of the three great growing areas for Australian wines, the Barossa Valley of South Australia can lay claim to the fact that it is the country's oldest, and in the opinion of many connoisseurs throughout the world, also the finest wine producing region in the country.

Originally named by Colonel William Light for the Barossa Region in Spain where he had fought in the Spanish Peninsula War, the name became misspelled due to the general illiteracy of the times. The word literally means "Hill of Roses" and is home to one of the most beautiful wine valleys in the entire world.

The Barossa Valley is situated about seventy miles north of Adelaide, the capital city of South Australia. It was settled in the early 1840s by a number of German Lutheran farmers who had fled their homeland due to economic problems as well as religious persecution and who had sought a place to reestablish their lives. For the next three generations, the Germans, along with their language and culture, prospered in the Southern Australian hills.

When it became apparent that the Barossa's fertile soils were perfect for growing grapes, the first organized plantings took place around 1847. Three years later, a Bavarian settler named Johann Gramp had produced his first commercial wine called Carte Blanche.

In the next few decades, the entire valley became a veritable vineyard and was recognized as Australia's leading viticultural area. Names like Penfolds and Seppelt emerged as leading wineries that are still in operation to the present day.

About the same time, the early relatives of Ian Mader set foot in the Barossa Valley. Natives of Silesia (at the time part of Germany; at present, officially part of Poland), the new settlers were peasant farmers who took to growing vines like most of their contemporaries.

"Our family has owned vineyards here for many years," informed Mader, "but mostly my early relatives tended to be farmers who supplied other wineries with top flight grapes. It wasn't until my generation that we decided to make wine for ourselves."

In the late nineties, Mader and his wife Suzanne began development of a winery. The name they chose for their efforts was VineCrest, a combination of the word vineyard and also the place where magnificently colored Grass Parrots or Laurakeets are found in abundance. The beautiful birds are prominently featured on the VineCrest labels.

The winery's first release of around 1000 cases occurred in 1999 and was met with instant raves and honors.

"Before then we had always made a little wine, but mostly for family and friends and family," offered a good natured Ian Mader. "Of course, everyone liked the wines we had made, but they were, after all, our closest friends. It was wonderful that the outside world immediately took to our wines."

VineCrest's production has risen steadily in the ensuing years and today stands around 10,000 cases, still small enough to be considered a boutique winery. If Ian Mader has his way, VineCrest will remain that way forever.

"We have some extremely sandy soils around here, and with the ever present potentiality for drought, it just seems wise to keep VineCrest at its present level. '05 and '06 created a large overage of wines in the Barossa Valley but '07 came in at just 50% of average and this year we are estimating that the tonnage will be around 75 or 80% of normal. You can see that Mother Nature played a deft hand in evening things out over the past two years." The fact that VineCrest has risen to the highest plateaus of Australian winemaking (a VineCrest wine has been selected as Wine of the Year for two successive years) is extremely important to Ian Mader, who considers his winery operation a symbol of true consistency.

"I've seen too many wineries win a nice award and then not be seen around again for five or more years," he explained. "To me it's vitally important that all of our VineCrest wines meet a certain standard. It's what I believe in and what all of those involved with our operation also believe is our benchmark."

In addition to exporting to the United States through Gold Medal Wine Club's International Series, VineCrest can also be found throughout Asia and expects to add Japan to its list in the near future.

wine regions of Australia

Australia is currently home to approximately 2000 wine producers, most of whom are small winery operations found in the 74 wine regions and subregions across the country. The vast majority of these wine regions are located in the southern terrains of Western Australia, New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia. These areas are filled with a diversity of climates, soils, elevation, and—ultimately—wine styles.

The Barossa DGI Wine Region

The Barossa is Australia's richest and best known viticultural and wine-making region. The Barossa is located approximately 60 miles north of the city of Adelaide in the state of South Australia.

Self sufficiency was important to the early settlers and as a result smoking meats, preserving fruits and making cheeses flourished. Above all, wine became a basic part of life and grape growing developed as a fundamental agricultural activity. The English sponsored the development of a commercial wine industry in the 1850s but the real growth took place from the 1880s onwards.

The Barossa wine industry developed along a different route from the traditional European practice of grower/winemakers. Although some growers did make wine for their own use, the majority sold grapes to wineries. The Barossa's strength and success has come from this specialization. Its pool of 540 expert growers who have blended their 150 year knowledge of the land and its climate with modern viticultural practice, creating a partnership with the wineries whose skills make the most of the superb fruit.

The Barossa has the world's oldest Shiraz vineyards, some dating back to the 1840s. Perfectly suited to the region's climate and soil, they produce a style no other region can match, and Barossa Shiraz has made an indelible mark on the international wine scene.

reading an Australian wine label

The Australian Wine and Brandy Corporation Act upholds specific regulations in order to control wine quality and ensure each wine's origin, authenticity, and style, as well as oversee exporting standards. Food Standards regulates wine labels with regard to:

Australia's mandatory and optional wine label requirements:

(m) = mandatory information on label; (o) = optional information

On the back label, the mandatory requirements include the name & address of the producer/owner, the alcohol content (15%), the allergens statement (sulfites added), and the health warning.

the flag of Australia

First flown in 1901, the Australian National Flag has become an expression of Australian identity and pride. The flag depicts three meaningful elements that represent the history and individuality of the country: the Union Flag, the Commonwealth Star, and the Southern Cross constellation. The Union Flag in the upper left corner signifies the history of British settlement and Australia's loyalty to the British Empire. Just below the Union Flag is the Commonwealth Star. Six of the star's points symbolize the six original states, and one point represents the Commonwealth's territories and future states. The Southern Cross constellation is made up of five stars and can only be seen from the southern hemisphere. The blue background color corresponds to Australia being an island continent.

Cheers, Mate!

International Series featured Australian wines

Shiraz

Considered the classic wine of Australia.

A ruby red color with bright fruit flavors rich in plum and fresh blackberry.

A delicious, full-bodied spicy red wine that pairs nicely with lamb, beef, Greek dishes and spicy foods.

2004 VineCrest Barossa Valley Shiraz

Home to the world's oldest Shiraz vineyards, the Barossa Valley is Australia's most famous wine region. With some vineyards dating back to the 1840s, the Barossa is perfectly suited to produce incredibly complex, rich, and full-bodied wines. Internationally recognized at both the Japan Wine Challenge and the New Zealand International Wine Show, the 2004 VineCrest Shiraz displays an intense dark berry bouquet with enticing spicy characteristics. This wine was barrel aged in American oak for 20 months, lending to vanilla overtones and rich, ripe fruit flavors on the palate. Pairs well with barbequed, seasoned meats. 100% Shiraz.

Cabernet Sauvignon

(kabber-nay soveen-yon)

One of the noblest in world class wines.

Full bodied, powerfully flavored, black currant fruit and berry-filled with a hint of chocolate flavors.

Rich and well structured.

2004 VineCrest Cabernet Sauvignon

Sourced from VineCrest's estate Turrung Vineyards, this 2004 Cabernet Sauvignon was awarded a Silver Medal at the New Zealand International Wine Show in 2006. The wine was also recognized at the 2006 Winewise Small Vignerson Awards in Canberra, Australia. Deep ruby red in color, the 2004 Cabernet reveals savory Australian plum characteristics with hints of mint on the nose. This full-bodied Cabernet was aged for 22 months in French Oak and opens up with rich blackberry flavors, soft tannins, and a smooth oak finish. Full, flavorful Cabernets like this one, pair nicely with grilled meats and pork roasts. 100% Cabernet Sauvignon.

Semillon

Intense fruit flavor, sandy yellow in color.

Fresh varietal bouquet.

Pleasantly dry, light and clean refreshing flavor with layers of citrus and honey, brilliant crisp finish.

2007 VineCrest Barossa Valley Semillon

First arriving in Australia in the early 1800s, Semillon is now among the region's leading varietals. The 2007 Semillon is a beautifully aromatic wine, made in a fruit accentuated, unoaked style that is uniquely characteristic to Australia. Pale gold in color, this crisp and refreshing wine exhibits flavors of honeyed tropical fruit and zesty lemongrass. The complex flavors and mineral aspects lead into a surprisingly long finish that allows the wine to be enjoyed on its own or paired with creamy seafood dishes. 100% Semillon.

AS A FIFTH-GENERATION MEMBER OF HIS DECIDEDLY GERMAN-ROOTED FAMILY, IAN MADER IS PHILOSOPHICAL ABOUT HIS INVOLVEMENT WITH VINECREST WINERY, A TOP-RATED SOUTH AUSTRALIAN WINE PRODUCER.

Proprietors Ian and Susan Mader with Col.

“From the stories I have heard since I was a youth,” Mader began, “the first settlers who came here were mostly peasant farmers. At the time, most of the land was owned by the British aristocrats, and the prices they were asking for the land weren’t all that attractive. But the Germans were a determined, hard-working lot of people and over time they began to be able to afford the land. They built the towns similar to the ones they had left in Germany with the doors facing the street. In South Australia, their culture and language flourished. My great, great-grandfather and the next two generations of our family spoke only German, and my own parents were really the first in our family to be multi-lingual.”

Mader also recalls the stories about the time during WWII, when the German population of the Barossa Valley was keenly watched by local authorities. Some residents were even interred, and the names of many places were changed from their German origin. Thankfully, all these towns have been restored to their former names. All the while, Ian Mader grew up in a wine friendly world. As a toddler, he was offered a tiny portion of wine with his meals. This led to a fuller appreciation of the grape’s greater potential and product when he began drinking wine and beer later as a teenager. Even so, he went off to university and wound up with a building technology degree before returning home.

“I guess it was always meant to be,” Mader, now 59, fondly reflected back. “All I had ever known was my family’s grape growing and I guess it was quite natural for me to follow my family into the business.” He met his wife to be, Suzanne, in the 1960s. Her father was, at the time, the Vineyard Manager for the giant Penfolds Wine Group in the Barossa Valley and offered to help Ian with the development of his first vineyard. “The vineyard was called Bull’s Grave Yard at first, but we changed it to Sandy Ridge,” he chuckled. “There were some old vines already there but I was encouraged to experiment with some new varietals. For the next thirty years, I was a grower for some of the finest wineries in South Australia.”

When Ian and Suzanne married almost thirty years ago, she brought into the marriage a deep background in the wine business. This expertise proved especially helpful when the Magers decided to open VineCrest Winery. “We found a wonderful location on what is called the Barossa Valley Way, which is the main wine route through the valley. Suzanne had former experience in opening and running cellar doors (winery tasting rooms) so the move was quite natural for her. She has been invaluable in making VineCrest a success, and I truly couldn’t have done it without her.”

Ian Mader also confessed that opening a boutique winery was something he had wanted to do for quite some time. He explained that as he got older, he looked around for a segment of the business where he could really enjoy himself, and considered VineCrest to be the perfect vehicle. “After all,” he confided, “it is all relevant to where one is in his life’s journey. My wife and I both wanted to really enjoy the business as we got older. Where else can you find lovely wines, lovely food and lovely people in the same setting than a small winery?”

An inkling of the dedication Ian Mader has set for himself and his winery can be found in its official name that Mader has recorded. That name is VineCrest Vineyards Fine Barossa Wine and serves as an inspiration to everyone connected to the winery. “I want our name to remind us what we stand for on a daily basis,” he added. “It also calls to our mind the degree of cooperation it takes for each of us to achieve our individual goals within our company.”

It is easy to see why VineCrest’s wines have gained such lofty status among the international wine community. Ian Mader just wouldn’t want it any other way.
